

The FCC should not implement any proposal that would lessen Indiana's Telephone Privacy law protections. The telephone service I pay for is for my convenience, not that of telemarketers. The Indiana Privacy law has been effective in improving dinnertime (and life in general) by eliminating unwanted telemarketing calls. Prior to the implementation of the law we received 15 to 25 annoyance calls weekly. We now get perhaps one; usually none. We are grateful for the Indiana law and ask that Federal agencies do nothing to dilute or negate the effectiveness of the Indiana Privacy law protections.
